*Notes:
According to the American Motor Safety Association, of which we are members, the only legitimate way to price a long distance move is by weight.
Charging by cubic feet is frowned upon and companies using this procedure are being investigated.
Volume estimates are subjective.
Some companies, typically moving brokers, will charge based on the volume of your goods while making note of the weight
(This is a trick – Don't get caught!)
Many companies also base their estimates on discounted tariff rates and offer major discounts (50% -65%). They do not show the tariff book to customers and they fail to inform the customers that there are many reasons to legally cancel discounts . For example if on the move day you have a few more items or a different weight than the weight you were quoted the rate can suddenly double or even triple!
The information on the extra charges is typically provided to the customers just before Delivering.
Be Careful!
